

Dr. Dennis Perman ::

Message of The Week

Dr. V

March 3, 2014

Dear Doctor:

Our profession tends to iconify its leaders, portraying them as larger than life with unique talents and capabilities. Beginning with the era of DD and BJ Palmer, colorful and endearing characters like Jim Parker and Reggie Gold have personned the chiropractic landscape for 118 years, each developing an entourage of followers and supporters that round out the energy field and perpetuate the message to generate new followers and supporters.

And then, when one of these flamboyant, highly accomplished and deeply loved heroes leaves us suddenly, a constellation that has been formed around that central gravitational field is disrupted, as individuals shift their orbits accordingly, seeking new patterns and behaviors to accommodate the new conditions, until a new galactic homeostasis is struck. Such a reformation will be required with the death of all-time great chiropractor and founder of Contact Reflex Analysis, Dr. Dick Versendaal.

I was talking with dear friend and outstanding Winners Circle Member Dr. Manuel Mazzini of Milan, Italy on Friday, the first consultation I had scheduled after hearing of Dr. V's unfortunate and untimely demise, and his initial shock gave way to sorrow about not being able to access him and ask his advice. Without thinking, I heard the words come out of my mouth, "Well, now you don't have to depend on his counsel, you can have his hands on your hands for every adjustment."

I attended a lecture that evening by Karen Garvey, a noted intuitive in my area, and at the end of her talk I told her that we had lost one of our most potent and well-versed health intuitives, and I asked her point blank, "Now that Dr. V is gone, what happens to all that intuition?"

Karen smiled and said, "Instead of being limited to just the person he was working with, now his power and his resources can be spread over everyone."

The juxtaposition of these two experiences unmistakably opens the door to greater awareness and a practical application to energies that might have been considered too esoteric to be utilized until now.

Is it possible that Doc was no longer willing to be encumbered by earthly form? All he ever seemed to want to do is heal the world, and maybe, just maybe he was ready to transcend the boundaries we humans must honor. Maybe at long last, he can do what he always knew he was meant to do, which is to heal -- to heal people, to heal doctors, to heal the planet, to heal everyone and everything.

I have never witnessed a more profound example of generosity of spirit coupled with superior insight and unfathomable intellect. Dr. Dick Versendaal leaves behind a rich legacy of healing perspective that will unfold over the coming decades.

His impact will continue to be felt, not only in our memories, but in actual practice. If you have a question about a tough case, think of Dr. V, invite him to step into your body and use your hands as his hands, and notice the result. It's inconceivable to me that he'd be unavailable, though his physical form may no longer be present. I believe that he is still willing to offer himself as a conduit of healing, more genuine than ever as a vehicle for universal forces and their innate embodiment, for the betterment of all, from now on and forever more. Try it and see.

Dennis Perman DC,
for The Masters Circle

PS - To see how the most successful chiropractors do it, come and see "How It's Done" in London, Chicago and NJ -- for info or to register, call 800-451-4514, or go to www.themasterscircle.com